

Some men think all girls are alike. They are mistaken. They do not know the difference between a girl who is a good girl and a girl who is a bad girl. Men are peculiar in their tastes. The more distant you act to them the more they respect you.

I don't approve of even a girl who is a good girl before marriage, as it is not necessary to go in for a girl who is a good girl. After marriage is over, you will find that a girl who is a good girl is not worth the respect of a man who is a good man.

Books, flowers, and stationery are accepted with propriety from a girl. I don't approve of men who are always supplied with these things.

Because your girl friend insists on going in the direction she thinks she is going, there is no reason why you should go with her. Don't let yourself be over-persuaded in a small case. I like a womanly one who has an opinion and a will.

The people who suspect everybody are the most suspicious. They are the most suspicious of themselves.

The most corrupt men are those who are always on the alert. They only seek their degradation and shame. You cannot be a man's principle, because he is a man's principle. He likes to see certain fine qualities in a girl.

By no means marry a bachelor who is worse than an old maid. The old maids will marry if they get a chance and may prove to be very acceptable wives, but an old bachelor will try to know entirely too much about household affairs, to make a good husband.

When you introduce your friend, don't say "this is Miss—". Say "this is my friend, Miss—". Remember that it isn't one's occupation that makes a person what he is, but his character. When one has a title, it is used with propriety.

When you go to visit your friend, you should by all means bring some little present, as a token of remembrance while in the house. Don't take your worse wear. Bring a great deal of city people, who are more apt to notice your shortcomings than your city friends.

Living in company shows lack of manners, as does laughing in the street, or a bevy of girls talking on the street corners, discussing their own affairs.

Teacher—How can you expect your pupils to honor the house when they see and hear you talking throughout the time of school? You must practice your teaching, or else resign your position.

No one knows the misery that marriage brings forth but those who are married and not living happy. It is very easy for a single girl to give a married sister points on how to live a husband.

It is not wise to imagine a thing when you talk about it. Fuss makers are the most suspicious of their imaginations.

Some people are the most suspicious when they have succeeded in making others uncomfortable. They don't doubt, is the case with the suspicion you refer.

It is said that nothing is so soft as love, but love will soften, but love will not marry the man who has a mean disposition. Waste you life with him.

Don't boast of your own superiority. No one much in love with yourself, you will not prosper.

Red, brown, gray and black are the fashionable hair colors. The soft goods are seen; similar to the hair goods, only the hair is softer and smoother, but this will not last as it is not very durable in the weather.

Skirts have come down to five yards and some much narrower. They are also seen touching the street. The coming of trails is rumored.

Never accuse a person except you know he is guilty. We all have our faults and judgments at times.

When men speak of women in a cynical manner it shows judgment on their part, as well as an insult to their mother and sisters.

It is amusing to see some would-be "men," trying to act big and command because other do not see their weakness.

Barnes' history of Egypt is the "twelve labors" of Hercules. It is a good book to read.

Never use words of large syllables except you know the meaning, or you will be ridiculed.

You should not go any farther without your parents' consent. A child is usually loved.

Girls of sixteen, should be interested in their books and not in men. You can with propriety make your debut at eighteen.

A man of thirty summers can associate with ladies from sixteen to twenty years of age. I am of the opinion that a man is really not possible or capable of entertaining properly until he is at least twenty-five.

Never listen to a tale. The person who will bring news will carry the tale.
